

KEYNO GAME RULES

Place the Keyno Game Board at the “head” end of the table and rack the 15 numbered balls, in a pyramid, on the “spot” at the other end of the table (as for Rotation Pool). The first player in each game breaks the balls from anywhere back of the string line, in front of the Keyno board, with sufficient force to drive at least one object ball to one cushion rail. Each player gets one (1) shot per inning, in turn, and may play any object ball without calling his shot. Balls pocketed are out of play for the remainder of the game.

If the cue ball is pocketed or remains on the Keyno board (except in a No. 16 hole), it is “Scratched” and the next player shoots with it from anywhere back of the string line. A player about to shoot in his turn may either “spot” or play for any numbered ball that has come to rest on the board, outside of a hole. Player making more than one (1) ball at a time is credited with all the balls he holes on that shot. Player dislodging a holed ball and making it in another hole is credited with it as if holed in the usual manner. The original player retains his credit for first making the shot. Sixty-one (61) points wins the game. The number of the holed ball plus the number of the hole into which it is lodged is the player’s score for that inning. Example: Player scores 10 points if he holes No. 4 ball in No. 6 hole (4 ball plus 6 hole equals 10), - even when he scratches the cue ball on the shot.

Player wins and the game is over:

- (a) When a numbered ball is holed in the same numbered hole as the object ball.
- (b) If any numbered ball is made in a “Keyno” hole.
- (c) When the cue ball comes to rest in the No. 16 hole after first striking any unholed numbered ball.

Player wins double and the game is over when he makes No. 15 ball in any “Keyno” hole. If no player has won when all the numbered balls have been holed and/or shot into pockets, rack the balls for a Double-Header game. The winner of the Double-Header game becomes the winner of the preceding (no decision) game. (These rules may be modified by House Rules.)
